ner over, officials and criminals commence the second act; the time was so arranged to conclude with the hour that the sangui the second act; the time was so arranged as to conclude with the hour that the sanguinary attack took place. An effigy of the victim, Aubert, had been prepared, and on this mimic figure the two male assassins illustrated their hideous crime by showing the manner in which the blows and stabs were originally inflicted—the female holding the light meanwhile. Then the gagging the mouth, covering the face with a towel, and entwining the lesden coils around the body, were gone through. The gocart was then brought to the door and the victim-effigy placed on it; all being ready, the ghastly procession started toward the river, the two men dragging the vehicle and the woman pushing behind, till they reached the bridge, when the stuffed figure was pitched into the stream. The magistrates then returned to their bomes, and the gendarmeric conducted the three culprits to their prison at Versailles. Notwithstanding the incessant downpour of rain a very large mob had assembled, who would have made short work of Gabrielle Fensyron if they could have got hold of her. As it is, unless the authorities can dig up any more sensational incidents, we hope to hear no more of these "civilization shows." Justice will no doubt be properly and decently administered without the aid or recurrence of these ridiculous surroundings. Oakum, Pitch, Cool-Tar, Resin, Refined
